Italy: The prospects are not bright that Giovanni Leone, the Christian Democratic Party speaker of the National Assembly, will be able to muster enough support outside his own party to permit him to form a government acceptable to Parliament.

President Segni will thus probably have to cast about again for someone among the leadership of the Christian Democratic Party to pull together a new regime. Speculation as to what kind of government will emerge ranges from possible one-party rule to the retention of Premier Fanfani's center-left cabinet.

Another election is another possible means of ending the political crisis. Giuseppe Saragat, whose Social Democrats did well in last April's polling, told the US Embassy on 18 June that he intended to suggest that Segni call elections as soon as possible.

Moro has also intimated that elections may be forthcoming. In any elections resulting from the present political muddle, the Communists would almost certainly make important gains.

NOTES

Congo: Another round of unrest and violence appears likely in the Stanleyville area as a result of a struggle for control of the new Haut Congo provincial government. Elements led by Georges Grenfell, a fanatically anti-Western Lumumbist who has been elected provincial president, are trying to combat efforts by Leopoldville's agents to unseat him. The militant pro-Grenfell youth group may attack US consular and information offices in Stanleyville in the course of demonstrations.
